You may have a strong desire to help animals with Reiki, whether it is your own pets, your horse, or your family's animals. You might even be considering working with animals with Reiki as a way of making your living or perhaps as a volunteer with an animal rescue charity.

Most Reiki courses do not include much teaching about treating animals and in particular many people feel daunted by the idea of how to treat a large animal such as a horse, but at the same time would really like to know how.

This one-day workshop will be an opportunity to explore this lovely aspect of Reiki practice. We will share stories of treating animals, learning from each other's experiences. We will discuss issues that need to be taken into account when working with other people's animals.

Woodgate Valley Urban Farm is a large venue with a wide range of animals to meet. Hopefully we will have the opportunity to treat goats and sheep (weather permitting), a rabbit and a dog. The venue is close to the M5 if you are coming from outside Birmingham.

Woodgate Valley Urban Farm is run by the community and is a charity, so by participating in this workshop you are supporting the work of this valuable place where city children and adults can meet animals.

Please remember to wear suitable clothing for working with animals.

What previous participants have thought of the course:

"Loved the reaction from the animals - how calming and therapeutic it was for them - so practical was brilliant! Felt very privileged doing Reiki for the first time on animals."

"The trust I felt from Pebbles was amazing, as she leaned towards me during the treatment. That she thought it was safe to lean on an "8 stone dripping wet" person restored my faith that it is not always the biggest and loudest that succeed. That pony is an angel."

Kate Jones has been practising Reiki with animals from the first weeks of learning Reiki, 21 years ago. She has treated a wide range of animals, both formally and informally ever since. She has been a Reiki Master for 18 years and enjoys sharing her enthusiasm for Reiki.

If you have any questions about the workshop please phone Kate on 01584 890 284.
